The Pennsylvania Council for International Education (PaCIE) represents a broad constituency of Pennsylvania educators from elementary schools to major research universities and leading international education organizations. More than sixty member institutions share knowledge, expertise and resources for their mutual benefit and for the benefit of Pennsylvania. By coordinating discussion and planning between all levels of educators and by including key international organizers, PaCIE facilitates consensus on emerging issues, enables curriculum integration and provides a context for exploring new and innovative ideas.

Through advocacy and coalition building, PaCIE connects international educational leaders with one another and with Pennsylvania's government and business leaders to prepare individuals and organizations for success in the global creative economy.
